Your Chart at a Glance

Your chart is cast in Placidus houses, with a Gemini Ascendant and a night sect. That makes the Moon, Venus and Mars the planets of your sect, and Saturn and Jupiter more work to read. The chart gathers into two large weights. One is a Virgo group in the fifth house: Moon, Mars, Uranus and Pluto. The other is a Scorpio group in the sixth house: Sun, Venus and Neptune, with Mercury and the Lot of Eros also in that house. Both are cadent houses, so much of your life runs through work, craft, service, creativity and private intensity more than through public display.

The first principal thread is the fifth-house Virgo group. The Moon and Uranus are conjunct within a very tight orb, Pluto joins them more loosely, and Mars shares the sign. Moon, Uranus and Pluto are all strongly expressed, and the Moon and Pluto are among the most powerful figures in your chart. This points to a restless, original, emotionally charged creative and personal life.

The second thread is the Saturn and Chiron conjunction in Pisces in the eleventh house. Saturn is exactly opposed to Uranus and also opposed to the Moon within a fraction of a degree. This sets duty, structure and belonging against freedom and feeling.

The Sun, Venus and Neptune in Scorpio are a counterweight, because they carry a notably harmonious tone in a chart whose average runs discordant. Mercury, your Ascendant ruler, sits in the sixth house, tying your identity to daily work and attention to detail.

Who You Are

With Gemini rising, you meet the world curious, quick and verbal, wanting to understand before committing. The Ascendant sits late in the sign and is squared by the Moon, Saturn and Uranus, all within about a degree. Chiron and Pluto also square it, though more loosely. This is a chart where the way you present yourself is pressed from several sides: feeling, restriction and the urge to break free all touch your basic manner. You may seem light and adaptable on the surface while managing a good deal of inner pressure. Mercury, the ruler of that Ascendant, is in Sagittarius in the sixth house and retrograde. That suggests a mind that thinks inwardly and revisits ideas before speaking, with a broad, philosophical reach that gets applied to practical, daily matters. It is trined by Jupiter, which supports a generous and thoughtful way of talking things through, even though Mercury itself is modestly expressed in power.

Your Sun is in Scorpio in the sixth house, closely joined to Venus and sextile Mars with an exact orb. Core identity is therefore intense, private and probing, and it is expressed through usefulness, skill and steady effort. You tend to build your sense of self through what you do well, and you may be more guarded about your feelings than your Gemini surface suggests. The Sun and Venus are so close that warmth, appreciation and self-worth are tied together, and you may find that being valued matters to you as much as being capable.

The Moon in Virgo is in the fifth house with Mars, Uranus and Pluto. Emotionally you are likely careful, observant and self-critical, yet drawn to creative expression and to people or projects that excite you. The Moon is powerful but strongly discordant in its contacts, so your emotional life can feel intense and unsettled, and it benefits from deliberate outlets and rest.

Where Your Chart Is Most Active

The most strongly expressed factors cluster in the Virgo fifth house. The Moon and Pluto carry high power, and Uranus, Mars and Saturn also sit above the chart's mean. Power is simply how strongly a planet is expressed, not how comfortable it is, and here it comes with a lot of discord. The Moon, Uranus and Pluto all rate below the chart's average net harmony, so that group can feel like a pressure cooker. The Moon is conjunct Uranus within a very small orb and conjunct Pluto more loosely, and Mars is also conjunct Uranus and Pluto in applying contacts. Together they suggest a personal and creative life prone to sudden shifts, strong attractions, intense reactions and a drive to remake yourself. Your emotions and your will are close companions, and there may be times when impulses outrun reflection. The fifth house links this to romance, children, play and risk, so these are the areas where the intensity may be felt most strongly.

Saturn is the other powerful, discordant planet, with the lowest net harmony in the chart. In Pisces in the eleventh house, it is conjunct Chiron, opposed Uranus exactly, opposed the Moon, and opposed Pluto. Saturn rules the eighth, ninth and tenth cusps, so questions of career, belief and shared resources run through this tense point. Friendships, groups and long-term hopes may involve a sense of responsibility or old hurt, and you may feel you have to earn your place. Chiron trines Neptune very closely, which offers a route toward compassion and healing through imagination or service.

The area of ease is the Scorpio group. Sun, Venus and Neptune are above average in net harmony, and Neptune in particular is both strongly expressed and harmonious. Sun and Venus are conjunct within a tenth of a degree, and Venus is sextile Mars, also within a tenth. The sixth house as a whole is strongly expressed and net harmonious, which suggests daily work, care and craft are where you find your most dependable footing.

Mixed expression appears in Mars, which is above the mean in power with discord and harmony in near balance, and in Jupiter in Leo in the third house, a modest but generally supportive voice for learning and communication, though semisquare Pluto and opposed the Midheaven.

Heart and Relationships

In love, the Sun and Venus conjunction in Scorpio shows a person who loves deeply and privately. You are likely to want loyalty and emotional truth more than casual charm, and to take time before letting someone close. Venus is on the Sun, within a tiny orb, and is sextile Mars, so affection, desire and appreciation tend to move together rather than pulling against each other. Neptune joins them by a looser conjunction, adding an idealizing, almost spiritual tenderness. It can make you very devoted and imaginative about those you care for, and at times unclear about where the real person ends and the ideal begins. Venus rules your sixth cusp, so relationships may begin or deepen through work, shared routines or acts of help. Care shown in practical ways is probably how you give and recognize love.

The Lot of Eros falls in Sagittarius in the sixth house, with Mercury. Desire and attraction may be stirred by minds that are frank, curious and wide-ranging, and by easy conversation. That fits the Gemini Ascendant, though a retrograde Mercury suggests you speak your feelings less readily than you think them.

The Moon with Mars, Uranus and Pluto in the fifth house makes your emotional needs strong and somewhat unpredictable. You may be drawn to passionate, unconventional attachments, and you may need both closeness and space. The Moon is also opposed to Saturn and Chiron, which can bring a protective reserve or a fear of being let down, perhaps from earlier experiences of feeling you had to be self-sufficient. The seventh house itself holds no planets, and its ruler Jupiter sits in the third house, so partnership is likely to be shaped by friendship, conversation and shared learning. Being understood in words may matter as much as being held.

Work, Purpose and Direction

Your work life is centered on the sixth house, where the Sun, Venus, Mercury and Neptune gather. This suggests a vocation of skill and service: craft, analysis, healing, research, or any field where steady attention and depth are rewarded. Scorpio gives you the ability to dig beneath the surface, and Mercury in Sagittarius adds breadth and a love of ideas. You may do best where you can both master details and keep a larger purpose in view. Neptune in the same house lends a caring, even idealistic quality to daily work, and the harmony in this group suggests that effort here tends to feel meaningful.

The Midheaven is in Aquarius, ruled by Saturn, which sits in Pisces in the eleventh house. Public direction is therefore linked to groups, communities and shared ideals, and to a serious, disciplined approach to them. The Sun and Venus both square the Midheaven, so who you are and what you are known for do not align effortlessly. You may need to deliberately bridge private inclination and public role. Jupiter opposes the Midheaven as well, which can make you swing between expansive ambition and doubt about whether the path is worthwhile.

Saturn's discordant pattern with Chiron, Uranus, the Moon and Pluto suggests that authority, reputation and responsibility are areas of real work. It can show up as a long apprenticeship, a feeling of carrying more than your share, or a calling that grows out of your own wounds. Because Chiron is conjunct Saturn, mentoring, healing or teaching others what you have had to learn may become part of your direction.

The Lot of Spirit falls in Taurus in the twelfth house. Purpose may mature quietly, through patience, solitude and steady, tangible work, rather than loud ambition. Many of your best contributions may be made out of public view before they are recognized.

How It All Fits Together

The chart keeps returning to a contrast between depth and pressure. The Scorpio group in the sixth house gives you a harmonious, productive core: purposeful work, loyal affection and a quiet intensity. The Virgo group in the fifth house and the Saturn and Chiron conjunction in the eleventh are the more demanding side, strongly expressed and quite discordant. They bring creative restlessness, strong feelings and a sense of weight in your relation to groups and authority. You are not meant to choose one side. The first gives you something steady to stand on while you work with the second.

Mercury ties these parts together. It rules your Ascendant and your fifth cusp, and it sits in the sixth house, while also ruling the sign that holds your Moon, Mars, Uranus and Pluto. Thinking, analysis and speech therefore become your main tools for managing both identity and feeling. The more you name what is happening and give it a practical structure, the more the intense fifth-house energy can be used rather than merely endured. Mars, ruler of Scorpio, sits in the fifth house, while Mercury, ruler of Virgo, sits in the sixth. In effect your two main groups answer to each other, so work and creative or emotional life are closely entwined.

Saturn's role is crucial. It is the ruler of your Midheaven and of two other cusps, and it opposes the Moon and Uranus almost exactly. Learning to let discipline and spontaneity cooperate, instead of fighting, is probably a lifelong project. Neptune's harmonious ties to Saturn, Chiron and the Moon offer a softening channel through compassion and imagination. The task is conscious engagement: rest for a sensitive nervous system, honest words for strong feelings, and work that serves something larger than yourself.
